Gregory Watson

To the Consumers:

For centuries the good earth and waters of Massachusetts have yielded a bounty of tasteful and nutritious foods. Their richness and flavor have been enhanced by native Americans, pilgrims and successive waves of immigrants in a variety of recipes and processing techniques. That tradition continues today, with a new breed of "agricultural entrepreneurs" producing a wide variety of exciting specialty foods -- from goat cheeses and shiitake mushrooms to vinifera and fruit wines -- made from locally-grown fruit, vegetable and animal products.

Massachusetts produced food products are unmatched for taste and freshness. Purchasing these local products is one of the best ways of ensuring the continued viability of the Massachusetts food industry, along with the priceless scenic vistas preserved by the more than 6,000 farms that grace our landscape from the Berskshires to Cape Cod and the Islands. These products make great gifts for friends and relatives. If you happen to be the self-indulgent type, they are guaranteed to tickle your palate in new and exciting ways.

This catalog represents represents a sampling of Massachusetts food producers and processors. I hope you'll treat yourself to the cornucopia of fresh, wholesome Made In Massachusetts products advertised here very soon, and that there will always be a place on your table for a "Taste Of Massachusetts."

Sincerely,

GREGORY WATSON
Commissioner

Finally a potato chip that is not a junk food, but a gourmet specialty health food.
During our research stages we discovered that most potato chips are cooked in cottonseed oil. We also realized that cottonseed oil was not available to the consumers in neither grocery stores nor supermarkets, and began to wonder why. Naturally, no one eats cotton, so why eat cottonseed oil?
With health in mind, we decided to use peanut oil to cook our potato chips because peanut oil not only contains half the saturated fats of cottonseed oil, and has no cholesterol, it also produces a much tastier chip with no bad after taste. The chips are coming and they're all natural, hand-cooked Boston Potato Chips. Call 617-723-6174.

"WHEN AMERICA'S GREAT BEERS ARE POURED TOGETHER, SAMUEL ADAMS RISES TO THE TOP."

"There are great beers being brewed in America now. And when you pour nearly 500 of them in one room, one beer comes out on top. Samuel Adams Boston Lager.

"That's what happened at the 1985 Great American Beer Festival, where 5,000 beer lovers voted Samuel Adams the Best Beer in America. And the same thing happened in 1986, in 1987, in 1989, and in 1990, my Samuel Adams Lager won a Gold Medal again. So I can honestly say that every year it's been entered, Samuel Adams has been chosen the Best Beer in America. No other beers have ever won such awards five years in a row.

"So you can drink whatever you're drinking now, and be a good beer drinker. Or drink my Samuel Adams Boston Lager, and be America's Best Beer drinker."
